

Good Ol' Boy

Long after the last confetti streamer had fallen to the floor and the echoes of the crowd's deafening roar had stopped ringing in his ears, Lee Humphrey felt an odd sense of emptiness.

It didn't happen right away, mind you. After all, April 3, 2006, was the greatest night of his basketball existence. That night, at the RCA Dome in Indianapolis, Humphrey and his University of Florida teammates polished off UCLA with ease in the NCAA championship, 73-57. Humphrey himself had enjoyed a great game and a monster tournament, setting records and winning awards along the way.
