Home Stretch: Clark Kellogg

From a spiritual perspective, my parents raised us according to the Christian norms that were prevalent in the late '60s, but we never went to church, and I didn't have an understanding of what it meant to have a relationship with Christ. I had a reasonably good moral compass, but it wasn't grounded in the truth of Scripture. We sought to do good to others and do the right things, but we were more of what you'd call "happy pagans."
