

Special K

There comes a time in a man's life when he must decide about spiritual matters—what to believe and who to follow. For Kyle Korver, that decision came in the shower.

While the scene wasn't exactly Hitchcockian in nature, it did produce some dramatic results. There, in the bathroom of his Philadelphia apartment five years ago, Korver wrestled with deep, longstanding spiritual questions. He realized that his family's strong heritage of faith did not pass on to him simply by bloodlines. He realized he had been treating Christianity like a faucet, turning it on or off as needed.

It was a long shower.
